For its third edition, Phenomenon will investigate the role of art in times of political urgency. By questioning singular points of view and naturalized concepts, art offers new ways of imagining a collective life, producing forms of social engagement, counteracting authoritarian and populist ideologies. Through art, the project will be looking for strategies that enable encounters of differential forces and interests, circumvent constructed regulatory systems and realize the creative and political potential of the unstable in-between.

“The function of art is to do more than tell it like it is; it’s to imagine what’s possible.”
Bell Hooks
